Richard Wittsiepe analyses the relevant IFRS statements with a view to possibly integrating them into existing workflows in an annual audit. He weighs the key issues of conversion by comparing them with the 4th EU Directive for accounting within the EU. The aim is to visualise the workflows as the basis for creating support software which can make a key contribution to cost-effective conversion.

of the Activities Financial Report of the City of Providence, Rhode Island Quarterly Financial Report for Manufacturing Corporations Financial Report for the Fiscal Year Ended Economic and Financial Report Financial Report of the Comptroller, State of New York The Global Findex Database 2017 World Bank Publications Annual Report of the Trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art WIPO US and UK economies 'badly corrupted' by massive growth in debt, according to new independent report by leading UK financial historian. The credit bubble that has developed in the UK and US economies over recent years is unsustainable and has 'badly corrupted' the economies of the two countries, with potentially serious destabilising results, says a major new study of the economic and investment implications of the build-up of debt in the two countries. Housing markets look particularly vulnerable in both countries. The 200-page report, Crunch Time for Credit? by Edward Chancellor, is based on research originally commissioned by Odey Asset Management, the London hedge fund management company. Chancellor's authoritative history of financial speculation, Devil Take The Hindmost (published in 1999), correctly identified the collapse of the stock market in 2000 and was named one of six indispensable investment classics by Money magazine. In the new report, Chancellor analyses the massive build up of debt in the US and UK, and compares it to several episodes from history, including the Great Depression of the 1930s and recent experience in Japan and Korea. He also chronicles the way that intellectual understanding of credit has developed over the past 300 years. He concludes: The growth of credit has created an illusory prosperity while producing profound imbalances in the British and American economies...When credit ceases to grow, the weakened state of these economies will become apparent. It will also become clear that the credit boom, by inflating asset prices and boosting profits, has led to inappropriate balance sheets (both for the private sector and in general). At some stage, balance sheets will have to be adjusted to face a new reality. The process of adjustment is likely to be painful. It may well end in either an extraordinary deflation...or an extraordinary inflation. Among the report's main findings are: On the global financial system - The Federal Reserve's consistent intervention to maintain financial stability and provide liquidity during recent crises has created moral hazard on a grand scale' and 'one asset bubble after another. As a result, the credit system is now dominated by leveraged short-term speculators to an unprecedented degree.- A revolution in the financial system, including credit derivatives, has shifted risk throughout the financial system, but risk cannot be destroyed, only redistributed. The modern credit system has never been stress-tested by a severe recession. - Low inflation and the perception that central banks know how to prevent cyclical downturns has been used to justify higher asset prices and yet more debt. Investors, says Chancellor, have failed to consider that lower inflation also implies lower future growth rates for profits and income. - More and more borrowers, both corporations and households, have become what economist Hyman Minsky called 'Ponzi finance units'. They are dependent on rising asset prices and the refinancing of their liabilities to remain solvent. - The Federal Reserve's

'easy money' response to the technology bubble in 2000 has helped create a new investment bubble in China, surging commodity prices and threatens to accelerate the de-industrialisation of the West. It has also created a global housing bubble, with mortgage debt at dangerously high levels.- Home-owners, consumers and financial markets will all feel the consequences of the bubble bursting, though whether the outcome is renewed inflation or deflation cannot yet be foretold. Relevant parallels include the slump of the 1930s, the stagflation of the mid-1970s and the debt deflation in Japan since 1990. On The UK Housing Market In the section on credit in the UK, the report provides an exhaustive analysis of the UK housing market, and argues that, as in the United States, it is virtually impossible to accept the Bank of England's view that the recent debt-fuelled rise in house prices is a benign and susta

In 2011 the World Bank—with funding from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation—launched the Global Findex database, the world's most comprehensive data set on how adults save, borrow, make payments, and manage risk. Drawing on survey data collected in collaboration with Gallup, Inc., the Global Findex database covers more than 140 economies around the world. The initial survey round was followed by a second one in 2014 and by a third in 2017. Compiled using nationally representative surveys of more than 150,000 adults age 15 and above in over 140 economies, The Global Findex Database 2017: Measuring Financial Inclusion and the Fintech Revolution includes updated indicators on access to and use of formal and informal financial services. It has additional data on the use of financial technology (or fintech), including the use of mobile phones and the Internet to conduct financial transactions. The data reveal opportunities to expand access to financial services among people who do not have an account—the unbanked—as well as to promote greater use of digital financial services among those who do have an account. The Global Findex database has become a mainstay of global efforts to promote financial inclusion. In addition to being widely cited by scholars and development practitioners, Global Findex data are used to track progress toward the World Bank goal of Universal Financial Access by 2020 and the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. The database, the full text of the report, and the underlying country-level data for all figures—along with the questionnaire, the survey methodology, and other relevant materials—are available at www.worldbank.org/globalindex.

As financial markets develop and deepen, one of the key issues for the fair, open and efficient operation of the markets is the protection of consumers rights in financial services. Be they bank depositors or borrowers or investors in insurance policies, securities or investment or pension funds, financial consumers need the ability to accurately understand the terms and conditions of their contracts and take action if the terms of contracts have been violated. The Note is the second report in a pilot program to analyze consumer protection in financial services. The objectives of the Note are three-fold, to: (1) present a set of draft good practices for assessing consumer protection in financial services; (2) conduct a review of the existing rules and practices in Slovakia compared to the draft practices; and (3) provide recommendations on ways to improve consumer protection in financial services in Slovakia. The Technical Note was prepared at the request of the Slovak Ministry of Finance, with the valuable support of the National Bank of Slovakia and other government agencies, ministries, and non-government organizations. In the past the World Bank has also prepared governance reviews of the Slovak financial sector for banking and private pension funds. Few guidelines are available for consumer protection in financial services. Consumer protection in financial services remains a new and developing area for which no consensus has developed on the broad parameters against which a specific country might be analyzed. This Note relied on the EU Directives related to consumer protection and the reports of European financial regulatory and supervisory agencies. Other sources were also used. In the United States, the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission and other state, federal and self-regulatory agencies have developed laws, rules and guidelines to protect financial consumers. In addition, the 2003 OECD Guidelines for Protecting Consumers from Fraudulent and Deceptive Commercial Practices across Borders and the 1999 United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection served as useful reference points for general consumer protection not related to the financial sector. The recommendations in the Note go beyond the provisions of the EU Directives currently in force. As described in the EU Consumer Protection strategy announced in March 2007 and the April 2007 Green Paper on Retail Financial Services, European financial consumers would benefit ...
