BEYOND THE OPEN DOOR: A CITIZENS GUIDE TO INCREASING PUBLIC ACCESS TO LOCAL SCHOOL BOARDS is the only comprehensive, up-to-date source of information on open meetings laws in the 50 states & the District of Columbia as they affect local boards of education. Based on nation-wide research & analysis conducted through the summer of 1989, this monograph explains what boards must do to comply with the law, & what citizens can do to assure that compliance. Beyond that, this volume provides a tool for citizens & board members to evaluate local performance, & offers a model policy to help improve public access & board openness. Included are easy-to-read charts comparing the major provisions of the law in each state & defining the precise grounds for legally-held closed sessions (by far the most common vehicle by which boards circumvent the law), a glossary of school district terminology, a one-page summary of each law (including a contact person for citizens who need more information or wish to file a complaint against their local board), & a directory of state boards of education.

Leading Your Community

Representative democracy relies on the informed trust of the citizens. School board members serve their communities at a crucial place, governing large sums of money and the future of the community's children. Without the informed trust of the citizens, this enterprise will fail. Trust may be lost directly, or through inattention to detail. One of the critical places for school boards to work to retain the informed trust of their communities is in the conduct of meetings that are effectively run, meet the requirements of the law and address the reasonable expectations of the citizenry. This paper focuses on the provisions of Washington's Open Public Meeting Act (OPMA), but also addresses other legal requirements, and nonlegal issues surrounding effective and responsive public meetings. This is written exclusively from the perspective of school districts and school boards. It should be kept as a resource to help dispel inaccurate common knowledge and practice, and to increase sophisticated compliance with the law and public trust.

Opening the Doors to Indiana Government

This comprehensive guide to all California law on access to government meetings focuses on the Ralph M. Brown Act (local government councils, boards and commissions), with parallel coverage of the Bagley-Keene Open Meeting Act (state government councils, boards and commissions) as well as special rules for meetings of the state legislature, the California Judicial Council, the Commissions on Judicial Appointments and Judicial Performance, the University of California Board of Regents, the Board of Governors of the State Bar, Student Government Bodies at California State University campuses, local school site Parent Advisory Committees, Homeowners Association Governing Boards, and locally adopted sunshine ordinances. The guide analyzes each statutory provision as well as its interpretive case law and attorney general's opinions, and includes the full text of each statute and court rule. Issues addressed for the Brown and Bagley-Keene Acts include the definition of key terms, the requirements for meetings, the rights of the public, exceptions from the open meeting requirement, dealing with violations without going to court, and legal remedies and litigation strategy. Also examined is the constitutional open government mandate added by Proposition 59 of 2004. The guide is written by Terry Francke, general counsel for the nonprofit public interest organization Californians Aware, with more than 30 years' experience helping journalists, citizen watchdogs, attorneys and even government officials and employees understand the open government laws. Francke is also author of the other CalAware Guides on Journalism Law in California and Public Records and Private Information in California.
