 Peterson's Grounded in an economic perspective, Financing Community Colleges: Where We Are, Where We're Going helps college leaders make sense of the challenges they face in securing and managing the resources needed to carry out the community college mission. Finance has perpetually been an Achilles heel for leaders at all levels of management. With the premise that leaders are better at winning battles they know something about, this book equips leaders with an understanding of the fundamentals and the complexities of community college finance. It tackles current and emerging issues with insight that is analytic and prophetic—a must read for current and prospective leaders.

Financial Assistance by Geographic Area Xlibris Corporation Offers a ten-step, personalized action plan designed to guide students and their parents through the financial aid process, and includes advice and instructions for researching aid options, filling out forms, and managing expenses. Ohio Public Technical Education Notebook Wintergreen Orchard

House In this new edition, Vault publishes the entire surveys of current students and alumni at more than 300 top undergraduat e institutions, as well as the schools' responses to the comments. Each 4-to 5- page entry is composed of insider comments from students and alumni, as well as the schools' responses to the comments. Nursing Programs - 2010	Wintergreen Orchard House Community colleges now serve more than 13 million students annually, nearly half of all American undergraduat es. Because of their open access mission, community colleges are a primary point of entry for many students, particularly underserved populations. Timely degree completion for associate- degree seeking students is	important for promoting social equality and economic development. This dissertation examined what influence if any input and environmental variables, specifically the amount and type of federal financial aid received have on a community college student's time to associate degree attainment. dataset were used to conduct a multiple regression analysis using a weighted total of 288,436 graduates. The final model identified 124 variables that were significantly related to months enrolled prior to associate degree attainment, and explained 42.3% of variance. Initial and ongoing goals and commitments emerged as the strongest predictors of time to associate degree attainment, followed by financial aid variables. This study supports Vincent Tinto's student departure model; it provides a foundation for future research, and can inform theory, policy and practice. [ASEE ... Student Aid Peterson's Default management practices and their relationship to the student loan default rate in public two-year community colleges was the focus of this investigation. Five research questions regarding written default management plans, default management practices, process management, accountability, and other factors impacting default guided the study. In order to gather primary data, a survey was developed and emailed to the public two-year community college members of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA). The results from 125 useable responses were statistically analyzed and examined. Although the findings were not rich in statistical significance, the data did reveal findings that have implications for financial aid practitioners, administrators, and policy makers interested in default aversion. NASPA Journal Kaplan Most law school guides offer school-reported stats to admission rates, average test scores, etc. No publisher understands insider information like Vault-- now Vault brings this expertise to
