Writing to Learn Harper Collins

Why you need a writing revolution in your classroom and how to lead it The Writing Revolution (TWR) provides a clear method of instruction that you can use no matter what subject or grade level you teach. The model, also known as The Hochman Method, has demonstrated, over and over, that it can turn weak writers into strong communicators by focusing on specific techniques that match their needs and by providing them with targeted feedback. Insurmountable as the challenges faced by many students may seem, The Writing Revolution can make a dramatic difference. And the method does more than improve writing skills. It also helps: Boost reading comprehension Improve organizational and study skills Enhance speaking abilities Develop analytical capabilities The Writing Revolution is as much a method of teaching content as it is a method of teaching writing. There's no separate writing block and no separate writing curriculum. Instead, teachers of all subjects adapt the TWR strategies and activities to their current curriculum and weave them into their content instruction. But perhaps what's most revolutionary about the TWR method is that it takes the mystery out of learning to write well. It breaks the writing process down into manageable chunks and then has students practice the chunks they need, repeatedly, while also learning content.

Take the fear out of writing essays and empower your students by giving them the tools to comprehensively express their point of view. Our resource breaks down the writing process while exploring the four different kinds of essays. Start off by learning what is an essay before using graphic organizers to help during the prewriting process. Continue this understanding with drafting by completing an informal outline. Then, go into great detail when describing something with descriptive essays. Learn how to tell a story with narrative essays. Explain a difficult subject more easily with informative or expository essays. Find out how to change someone's mind with persuasive essays. Finish up the unit with revising, proofreading and editing practice. Aligned to your State Standards and written to Bloom's Taxonomy, reproducible writing tasks, crossword, word search, comprehension quiz and answer key are also included.

Research Question: How does the teaching of an organizational checklist and graphic organizers affect struggling second grade students in their informational writing? Sub Questions: (1) Would an organizational checklist lead to better informational writing? (more writing samples with a level 3 according to AUSD rubric); (2) Would a graphic organizer lead to better informational writing? (more writing samples with a level 3 according to AUSD rubric). Research Activities: This research focuses on teaching students to organize their writing better by using the Step Up to Writing approach. The students were introduced to a graphic organizer which they used throughout the inquiry. The students then were taught to use a writing checklist to help them organize and improve their writing skills. Context: The study took place in a self contained second grade classroom in a public school. The intervention was implemented with the whole class, but focused on four focus students. Out of the four students, one was an English language learner, whose primary language was Chinese. Methods and Data: The intervention lasted a period of six weeks and incorporated a variety of writing activities to practice the tools being taught in the inquiry. In addition, peer work through the use of the writing checklist increased collaboration. Data sets include a pre and post writing assignment, an attitudinal survey and a series of observations. Results: The comparisons of pre and post intervention data indicate that the use of the graphic organizer and writing checklist positively increased students' scores. The writing activities, with the use of the writing tools improved the students' with the organization of their writing and their ability to focus on one topic. Using the checklist gave students the ability to work with one another creating a sense of responsibility. Grade Level: Second Grade. Data Collection Methods: Observation-behavior tallies, student work, Survey - attitude, writing assessment, writing samples. Curriculum Areas: English Language Arts, Writing. Instructional Approaches: Writing-Prompts, Writing-Organization, Writing-Explicit instruction, Writing-Peer response/feedback, Writing-Self-evaluation.

Research question(s): How will teaching the use of a graphic organizer and a checklist help struggling fourth and fifth grade students improve their structure and content of summary writing after reading a news article? (1) Will using Step Up to Writing strategies that are organized into one graphic organizer help the structure of students' summaries to include a topic sentence, details, and a conclusion? (2) Will using a checklist, which include the questions: who, what, where, when, why, and how, improve students' ability to recognize whether their summaries include the most important information from the news article reading? (3) Will using Step Up to Writing strategies that are organized into one graphic organizer help students' ability to figure out a logical progression of ideas in their news article summaries? Research activities: Context: The study took place in combination class of fourth and fifth grade students at a public school in the Bay Area. The intervention was especially focused on five students. Two of the students were fourth grade students and three of the students were fifth grade students who were all struggling with summarization. Although I had English language learners in my class, these five students who were not English language learners were having the most trouble with summarizing articles. Methods and Data: The whole-class intervention lasted six weeks, but three of the weeks were an interruption due to the Winter Break. Each day varied between 45 minutes to an hour and a half depending on students' needs. The students were expected to use a graphic organizer created using Step Up to Writing strategies and a checklist in order to help students with their article summaries. The data sets used were the grading of summaries based on a rubric done as a pre- and a post-intervention assessment, attitudinal data found through a survey also done as a pre- and a post-assessment, and in-the-midst notes written daily. Results: Comparisons of baseline data to outcome data suggested that using a graphic organizer and a checklist improved students' ability to write an article summary. My target students improved their average score from a 4.8 to a 9.5. The class average improved from 6.8 to 9.8 out of a total of 12 points. The graphic organizer was able to assist students in organizing their ideas in a logical progression, help students create a topic sentence, conclusion sentence, and indicate where details are expected in a paragraph. The checklist helped students pull out the most important information of the article to include in their summary. Together, these two strategies led to drastic improvement in writing. Grade Level: 4 and 5. Data collection methods: Survey-attitude, Observation-Student engagement/behavior tallies, Student work, Writing samples, Writing assessment. Curriculum Areas: English Language Arts, Writing. Instructional Approaches: Graphic Organizer/concept maps and Writing-Summary.

The book describes the author's experiences as an instructional coach at an underperforming high school, with a graduation rate of 30 %. The book discusses the reasons why students are failing at this high school, and offers suggestions for improving the school. It includes "hard to believe but true" anecdotes of events he witnessed during his year at the school. This book challenges the status quo of US education systems, and calls for a re-tooling of curriculum and instructional practices.

Research question(s): How will teaching and using outlining as a planning strategy impact the organization of second-grade students' summary writing? (1) How will the content quality of student summary writing improve after teaching, modeling, and scaffolding the use of outlines and writing frames? (2) How will this research on second-graders' writing organization impact a teacher's perceptions about teaching writing? Research activities: This research explores the use of outlines as a planning strategy to facilitate second-grade students' writing and impact the organization and content quality of students' summary writing. Context: The study took place in a second grade, self-contained classroom composed of a diverse group of students with a wide range of academic needs. The intervention targeted six students who represented a continuum of writing skills and abilities: Proficient, Basic, Below Basic. One of the six focus students was an English Language Learner, and one was receiving additional services for language development. Methods and data: The intervention occurred over a course of nine weeks and comprised of sixteen writing sessions. Session activities ranged from whole class, direct instruction on intervention components, small group brainstorming and practice with Step Up to Writing (Auman, 2003) graphic organizers, and independent application of outlines and writing of drafts. Data sets included pre and post parent surveys, student writing samples, teacher observations, and teacher-created newspapers documenting the students' work and community's responses. Results: From the analysis of preliminary and outcome data, students demonstrated growth in their summary writing. Improvements varied, but were noted in both the quality of structure and content of writing. Improvement in organization was demonstrated through increase in use of transition words and appropriate order of sentence structures; improvement in content quality was demonstrated through increase in details and explanation/example sentences, as well as the strength of support; in addition, overall student self-efficacy was shown to improve through teacher observation. Conclusion: The inquiry findings suggest that targeting a writing strategy with the use of supplements from a prescribed writing program, such as teaching and using informal outlines as a planning strategy prior to drafting paragraphs, may work towards improving the structure and organization of a paragraph. Findings suggest that strategies working to improve the organization of writing may also work to enhance the content quality of student work. In addition, home-school connections and teacher perceptions about teaching writing may be reinforced and strengthened through the implementation of a targeted intervention. Grade level: Elementary, Second Grade. Data collection methods: Parent surveys, teacher observations, student writing samples, parent reflections. Curriculum area(s): English Language Arts, Writing. Instructional approaches: Direct instruction (writing); collaboration; graphic organizers; outlining; writing-summary; school-community.
