I can look back and laugh about it now, but the idea for the eBook came from my frustration, stress, wasted time, and failures adapting to the changes in the online hiring process nearly every company uses today. My goal was to find what every was struggling with and provide a tool to help students, career professionals, or job hunters succeed at finding and winning their career job. Personally, I was involved with the "old school" job search and hiring process e.g. looking in the paper ads, hopefully, find an opportunity... then physically apply for the job in person. My entire professional career has evolved as companies made changes to the hiring process. I have cut my teeth navigating the constant changes made to job postings, applications, resume submission, screening, and interviews as the technology became more sophisticated. These changes put many great, qualified, and talented workers at a severe disadvantage. Why? If you haven't learned the skills required to apply for jobs this way, for whatever reason, you would struggle all around. With that, competition for good jobs is directly proportional to the increase a company makes in the jobs-posts marketing on social media. Making it even more challenging to stand out. It is incredibly difficult to learn the latest job-search techniques, build your online professional profile and resume if you don't have tools and guidance helping develop your skills. A lot of time and effort goes into the entire process from start to finish. So, any setbacks are strongly felt the longer it takes to complete. Speed is key when applying to good jobs like many other aspects in business. If you don't use eBook the job-search process is likely to get stressful. How To Get A Recruiter To Notice You CreateSpace

The job you want, the organisation you want to work for, and the fulfilment that this will offer you will be different for everyone. One of the things that I have seen repeatedly after coaching hundreds of people, interviewing hundreds of people, or mentoring, is that people who fail to plan, plan to fail. There are so many countless instances where I will agree to mentor or coach someone. During the initial consultation where we get to know each other, it becomes apparent to me that these individuals, regardless of their point of need or circumstances, are lacking structure, a plan, or guidance to help them rewire their thinking. Often, I find that these people have recognised that they are not happy in their job, are looking for their first job, or want to improve their financial and career prospects. Getting to this point is as important as the steps you need to take to get to your career's next phase. I repeatedly see the same approach that they have perhaps applied to get their current job or some basic steps, such as writing a simple resume being applied to their next job search. This approach is what I see quite frequently. It is no surprise that such approaches, which are not very considered, result in being rejected for the jobs you apply for or not even getting a response from employers after you have submitted your application. Frustration, losing self-confidence, and motivation in all areas start to see cracks. You start to question your ability and your skills. You might summon the motivation needed to keep going, hoping that the circumstances will be different. It's a numbers game, i.e., keep applying for countless jobs, hoping that one day you will get the big break you believe you deserve.
